COMMUNICATION ETHICS NOW

Richard Keeble (ed)

Communication Ethics Now explores many of the fascinating and challenging ethical issues of today – from the British mainstream press's coverage of torture to PR's complex ideologies. The 25 chapters are drawn from contributions by top international ethicists and practitioners to the quarterly Ethical Space: The International Journal of Communication Ethics. They include:

- An exploration of the representation of Carole Caplin in the Daily Mail and the Mail on Sunday – by Jane Taylor
- Media standards slump in Germany's beastly year – by Susanne Fengler and Stephan Russ-Mohl
- The importance of caring: ethics, communication and Higher Education – by John Strain

The book is divided into five sections: 'Journalism ethics today', 'Journalism ethics: historical perspectives', 'Communication ethics and pedagogy', 'Communication ethics: philosophical explorations' and 'Business and communication ethics'.

"This book convincingly demonstrates how lively and relevant today's ethical reflections on communication can be. The chapters of the book cover such an exciting and broad range of topics."

- Cees Hamelink, Professor Emeritus of International Communication at the University of Amsterdam

About the Editor: Richard Keeble is Professor of Journalism at the University of Lincoln. He was editor of The Teacher (1980–84) and a journalism teacher at City University (1984–2003). His publications include The Newspapers Handbook (Routledge, 2005 fourth edition), Secret State, Silent Press: New Militarism, the Gulf and the Modern Image of Warfare (John Libbey, 1997) and Ethics for Journalists (Routledge, 2008 second edition).
