

EXTREMITIES

C A Devine is sailing into troubled waters with her thrilling new crime novel

Burnt out from fifteen grueling years of corporate coding, C A Devine packed in her job and headed to the Mediterranean. She spent six months living aboard a yacht with the aim of writing a long planned hacker conspiracy novel. Instead the heat and festivals of a Spanish summer, and the feeling of isolation from lack of Internet access, inspired her to write Extremities.

'Extremities expands on the much loved thriller genre by combining crime, conspiracy and espionage with witty dialogue and fast paced action,' observes Devine. 'It follows the interlocking stories of complex characters with constant twists and turns to keep the reader guessing.'

Inspired by authors such as Harlan Coben and Lee Child, C A Devine's novel is an edge of seat ride across the Atlantic.

Disgraced NYPD Lieutenant Mac Ryan is desperate to flee his new unwelcome celebrity after his undercover investigation implodes and his partner is killed in a shootout with a notorious Afghan drug baron. Escape is offered aboard an Atlantic yacht where an enigmatic English writer, Max, appears equally intent on escaping her past. But when Max is abducted right in front of him, Mac is dragged into a world of deception, conspiracy and spooks where he must finally face his personal daemons.

MI5 agent Lizzie 'Lucky' McKenzie has just gone AWOL. She is on a personal crusade of revenge. Someone must pay for a war crime that has gone unpunished and she is prepared to act as judge, jury and executioner. But her target has turned out not to be the soulless individual she imagined. Is he really guilty of the appalling crime? Her pursuers are upon her, but her resolve is wavering. Should she exact justice while she has the chance?

CADEVINE is a successful freelance corporate code writer and avid amateur sailor. She was born in Scotland in 1971. She splits her time between her farmhouse in the West of Ireland and her ancient sailboat, moored in Spain. She is married with one daughter
